Jean Louis Rodolphe Agassiz (1807-1873) was a Swiss-born American biologist and geologist who is recognized as a scholar of Earth's natural history. He emigrated to the United States in 1847 after visiting Harvard University. He went on to become professor of zoology and geology at Harvard, to head its Lawrence Scientific School, and to found its Museum of Comparative Zoology. He is particularly known for his contributions to ichthyological classification, including of extinct species such as megalodon, and to the study of historical geology, including the founding of glaciology. (source Wiki)

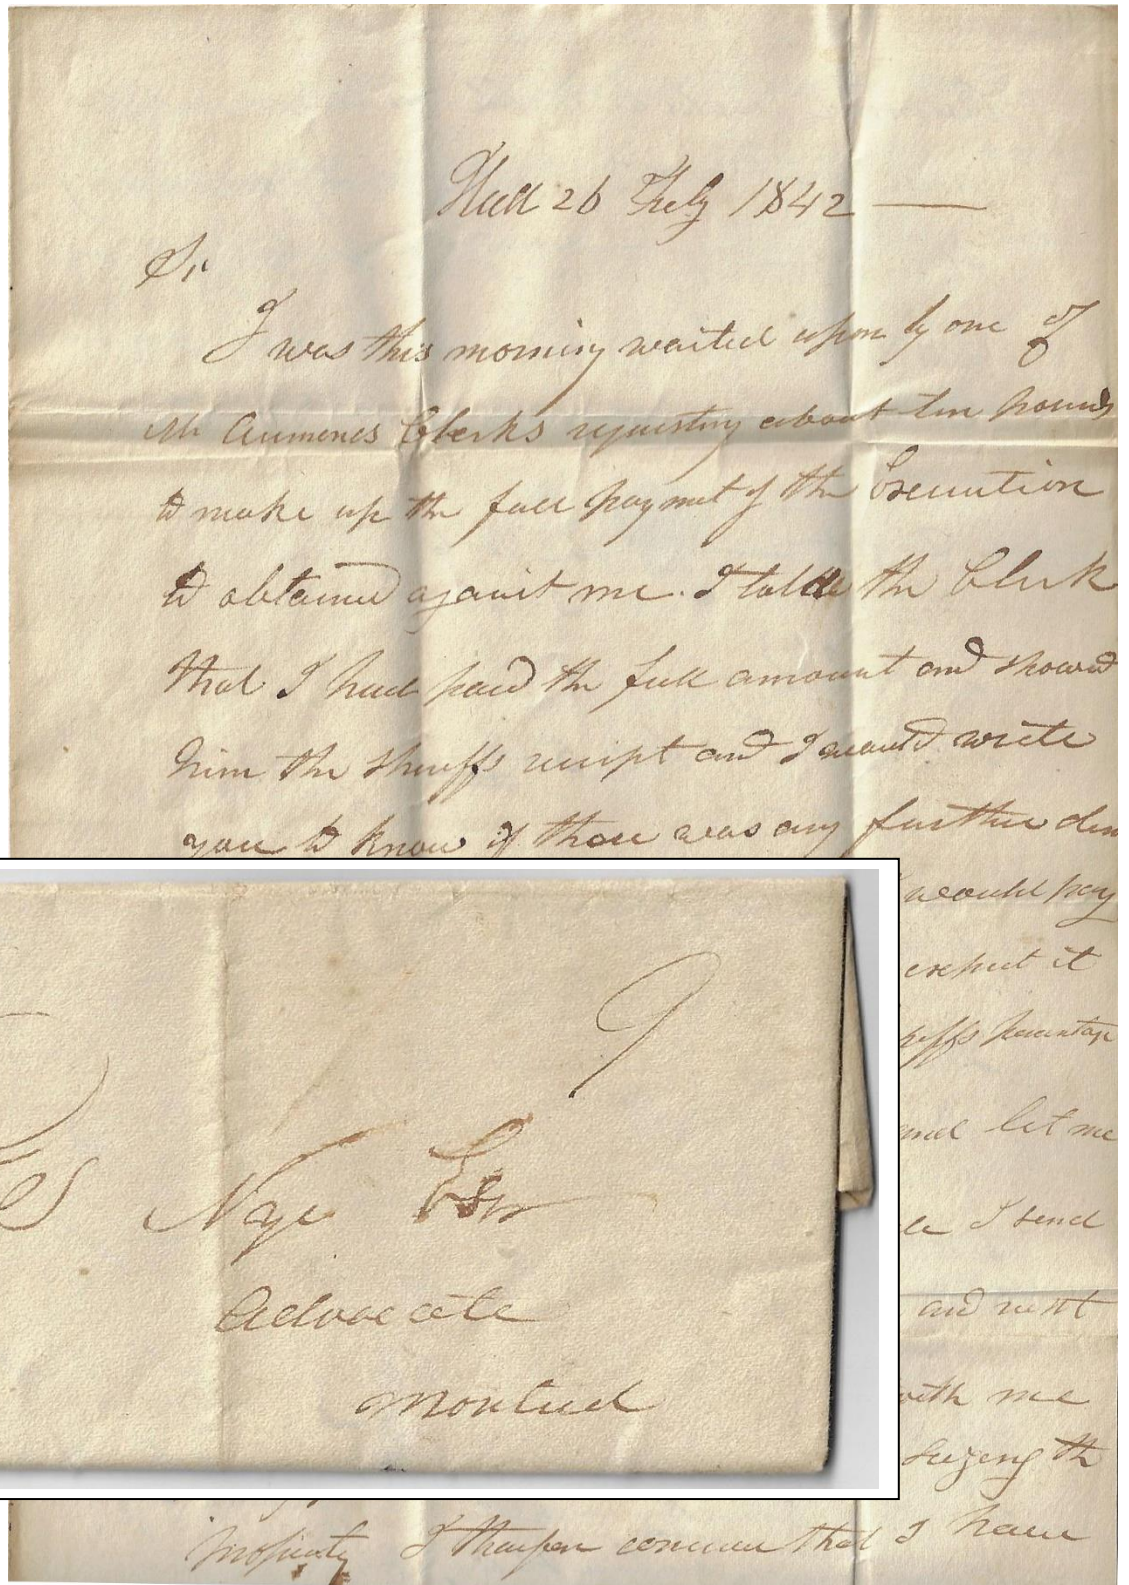

Arnold Henry Guyot (1807-1884) was a Swiss-American geologist and geographer. In 1848, he settled in Cambridge, Massachusetts and worked at the Lowell Institute. For several years the Massachusetts Board of Education retained his services as a lecturer on geography and methods of instruction to the normal schools and teachers' institutes. As professor of physical geography and geology at Princeton University. He is the namesake of several geographical features, including Guyot Glacier in Alaska, The Guyot Crater, Mount Guyot on the North Carolina and Tennessee border, a Mount Guyot in New Hampshire, a Mount Guyot on the Rocky Mountain Continental Divide in Colorado, as well as a Mount Guyot just southwest of Mt. Whitney, in California. The building housing the Department of Ecology and Evolutionary Biology and the Department of Geosciences at Princeton is named Guyot Hall in his honor. (source Wiki)

Richmond 31 March 1834

Dear Sir

Thomas Stevens has visited your number 6 in 2^d St. Ascott (some part of which he says is good) & has been with me to ascertain terms. I found that an Englishman him £150. for his farm if he could realize his money from England, & therefore said the most I imagined you would be disposed to offer would be £75 and one half of the Ascot Lot; to this he demurred especially as he could not value the Ascot land higher than 75 pence. — If you should find on examining the Charter of Prompton at Mr Dale's Office that this Prompton Lot was granted on 27th Nov. 1800 to Hanna Willcox instead of having been 19th Dec. 1801 granted to Elmer Lushing you would most probably come to the conclusion that Mr Stevens had the best right: but if certainly have for the Lot, though it appears to have property. Some time back holds one given a note of the land. I would enclose original Court might for Mr D. & it that you would at the next terms
